General Comment

A woman's fertility is a natural function of her healthy body. Chemical means used to suppress this normal healthy function have many harmful side effects from blood clots, loss of libido & infertility, up to and including death. Chemical means of preventing implantation of a fertilized egg, or causing the expulsion of a newly implanted fertilized egg have an even greater risk associated with them. This risky interference with reproductive health is in no way health "care". No taxpayer should be compelled to fund this type of deliberate interference with a women's healthy well-functioning body, and taxpayers who recognize the harm to women that these practices cause have an even greater duty to refuse to fund them.
